THE HEBREW PASSOVER. - Yesterday even ing at sunset the Hebrew Feast of Passover was commenced and will continue eight days. The feast is held in commemoration of the deliverance from bondage of the Israelites in Egypt. and is one of the greatest holidays of the Hebrew year. Many customs, transmitted through ages, are still adhered to by Israelites and practiced during Passover. Among them is that of eating only unleavened bread from the first to the eighth day. This is to bring to mind that the hosts of Israel banished by Pharaoh car-ried with them the bread which had not yet fermented and baked it unleavened in the desert. It is also customary to eat bitter herbs, either the root or stem of the horseradish, as a reminder of the bitter and trying time of Israel's

In almost all well-regulated Hebrew households, on the first night of the feast the family gather around the board; the senior member reads the history of Israel's persecution from the time of Abraham; all cat unleavened bread and drink of wine; and the home service ends with the singing of the song of Solomon. During the service a child is made to ask: "Why do we eat unleavened bread to-night and leavened bread on other nights?" Whereupon the senior replies by reciting the chapter commenceing "Slaves were we to Pharaoh in Egypt, but the Lord our God came in His might and gave release." Among orthodox Hebrews—and there are many in the congregations denominated "reformed" who observe the orthodox rites-it is customary at the family service to have a glass of wine, a plate, &c., and a chair in addition to one for each person present. This and the opening of the door during the service is done that the Prophet Isaiah might return. When all have left the table the plate and chair are left undisturbed and the glass of wine is covered with a piece of unleavened

FREE LUNCHES. - There is no necessity for giving this advice in one sense, but in another there is. The New York Commercial Advertiser points out very correctly one of the chief causes of the wide-spread of intemperance in the cities, viz: the "free lunch" table or counter to be found in almost all the drinking saoons. The free feed attracts thousands of the poorer classes to these places, and once there, and having shared in the lunch, they feel bound to take one or more drinks. The liquor dealer makes such an enormous profit on his whiskey and lager that he can well afford to set out a free lunch table, and at the same time acquire a reputation for liberal hospitality. The Advertiser is right in saying that this practice of giving lunches gratis to all comers is one of the most prolific sources of the formation of drinking habits.

When will the temperance people take the hint, and, by providing places where men may get for a trifle (half what the whiskey costs) hot coffee and a plain but substantial lunch remove the temptation to drink liquors from thousands? One-fifth of the money spent annually in the junketings, and sprees, the rents, incidentals and flummery of the temperance secret societies would provide good readingrooms and cheap coffee houses, which might do more to keep young men out of the way of temptation to driok intoxicating liquors than an infinity of lectures and cords of pledges. When the temperance folks learn to be as liberal with their money in promoting their cause as the liquor dealers are in sustaining theirs, the battle would be a good deal more even than it is now. Some of this advice is from the Jersey Journal.

How GAS IS MADE.—It must interest us to know the process of making an article so extensively used in our cities, and we publish a sort of gas catechism, which conveys a great deal of important light to the juvenile mind on this subject:

"How do they make gas?"

First, they put about two bushels of bituminous coal in a long air-tight retort: This retort is heated red hot, when the gas bursts out of it, as you see it burst out of lumps of soft coal when on the parlor fire. The gas passes through pipes. A ton of coal will make ten thousand cubic feet of gas. The gas, as it leaves the coal, is very "How do they purify it?"

First, while hot, it is run off into another building; then it is forced through long, perpen-dicular pipes surrounded with cold water. This cools the gas, when a great deal of tar condenses from it, and runs down to the bottom of the per-pendicular steam boiler, half full of wood laid crosswise. Then ten thousand streams of cold water are spurted through the boiler. Through the mist and rain, and between the wet sticks of wood, the gas passes, coming out washed and cleansed. The ammonia condenses, joins the water, and falls to the bottom.
"What next?"

Well, next the gas is purified. It is passed through vats of lime and oxide of iron, which take out the carbonic acid and ammonia. 'What next?"

The gas is now pure. It is passed through the big station meter, then through the mains and pipes, till it reaches the gas jets in our room. Then it burns, while you all scold because it don't burn better.

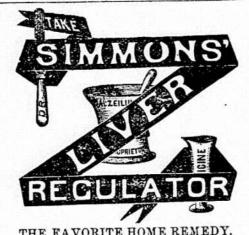

UNHAPPY CONDITION.—The N. Y. World comments editorially upon the unhappy condition of a Hindoo lover, who appeared before a magistrate, Mr. Dosabhoy Framgee, complaining that whenever he approached to pay those delicate attentions peculiar to lovers the lady proceeded to bite him. He could stand being "shook," but to be "chawed" up was too much for good nature. Mr. Dosabhoy, who appears to have been himself one of the 'b'hoys," expressed a willingness to release the young man from his engagement; but, alas! he had paid sixty-five rupees, which the biter would no restore, and so the unfortunate lover was compelled to marry her. The World then draws a veil over the picture; over the cooing and billing; the young wife seized with a glow of affection in the middle watches of the night, and proceeding to take a whack at her lord's nose, or his ear, or anything handy. With a deep feeling the writer institutes a comparison between connubial bliss in the United States, as described by the poet--"Oh, there's not in this world a happier life Than to sit by the stove-pipe and tickle your wife;

To kiss her warm lips in your moment's of And twist the cat's tail when she jumps on your knee,"
